FRANCE GOES BACK TO WORK WITH COURAGE

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 6.—France "has gone back to work with a spirit of virile courage, the spirit that brought recuperation so quickly after the war of 1870, and that paid an enormous debt so quickly as to gain the admiration of the world," according to Maurice Casenave, minister plenipotentiary and direct-general of the French public services, in an address here today at the celebration of the anniversaries of LaFayette and the first battle of the Marne.

Mr. Casenave who spoke at the city club, said that the false legend of a "frivolous and corrupt France" which Marshal Joffre had destroyed by the victory of the Marne, had been succeeded by an equally false legend, advanced by her enemies that France was bled white beyond the hope of resuscitation. He declared the progress made in his country even since the armistice, was a proof that France would arise from her present afflictions greater and stronger than ever. A rosy picture of French prosperity with increased outputs of metals, textiles, coals, potash and farm products was drawn by the speaker. He also said that France's colonies, often ignored, were larger than the whole of the United States including Alaska, the Philippines, Porto Rico and other possessions, that they were rich in mineral and agricultural wealth and possessed a population of more than fifty million "nearly all had workers who have proven their loyalty to the mother country by fighting bravely for her in the present war."

Baseball Pennants
Have Been Bought
For Many Seasons

Buying the pennant has become a popular phrase in the west. Due to the activities of the Giants to enrich themselves in talent the baseball public beyond the Alleghenies coined it. This is not a new practice, on the contrary it is as old as professional baseball. Twenty years ago here in Brooklyn we had a plain case of it, writes Len Wooster in the Brooklyn Times. The crack Baltimore Orioles were transplanted practically intact at Washington park. With them came New Hanlon. The remade team won the flag in 1889 and repeated the following year. If this was not a case of buying a pennant, what is? Without the Orioles to help out Brooklyn never would have been a pennant winner in successive years. The great combination had the National league tied in knots until it began to break up.

The Federal league was another instance of pennant purchasing. The magnates in their early career had so much money at their command that they vied with one another to secure the best players procurable in the National and American leagues and wrecked every minor league. True, the first object was to give the league a footing, but the fact was not lost sight of that the wholesale buying of athletes aimed at winning championships. So it is with every big trade. When the Cubs bought Alexander and Killefer from the Phillies they were after the pennant. Eddie Collins was obtained from the Athletics for $50,000 in order that the White Sox might attain the pinnacle. Jim Dunn paid the Red Sox owners a like sum for Tris

Speaker that Cleveland might fly a flag. John McGraw is not acting strange at all. His aggressiveness was meant to purchase the 1919 pennant as the westerners contend. He was only pursuing a time-honored custom in professional baseball. As to its merits, please it, others praise it as good business.

Always Interesting

The stories which tell of how people in moderate circumstances rise to places of affluence by reason of careful and economical living are always interesting.

Doubtless the principal reason why these stories are always interesting is because they evidence that the successful people have a definite purpose and to attain their desires they persistently sacrifice and never give up.

We suggest that you build up a 4 per cent savings account in this bank with that persistence which invariably means success to the saver.
